

MPP is the largest marijuana policy reform organization in the United States.

MPP's projects include:

- lobbying state legislatures to pass legislation to protect medical marijuana patients from arrest;
- passing state ballot initiatives to protect medical marijuana patients from arrest;
- helping activists build support for medical marijuana bills in their home states;
- building support for medical marijuana legislation in the U.S. Congress;
- encouraging major health and medical associations to take favorable positions on medical marijuana; and
- urging federal agencies to clear the way for FDA approval of marijuana as a prescription medicine.

And we need your help.

Please fill out the form on the reverse to support MPP's work with a financial contribution or to receive information by U.S. mail and/or e-mail. ►

Federal law bars doctors from prescribing marijuana and severely curtails research into its therapeutic uses. Though some small studies of marijuana are now underway, the National Institute on Drug Abuse — the only legal source of marijuana for clinical research in the U.S. — has consistently made it difficult for researchers to obtain marijuana for studies ... and impossible to do the sort of large-scale, extremely costly trials that are needed before the FDA can approve marijuana as a prescription medicine.

Please help MPP change state and federal laws so that seriously ill people nationwide can use medical marijuana without fear of arrest and imprisonment.

“Marijuana has been reported to be effective in: a) reducing intraocular pressure in glaucoma; b) reducing nausea and vomiting associated with chemotherapy; c) stimulating the appetite for patients living with AIDS ...; d) controlling spasticity associated with spinal cord injury and multiple sclerosis; e) decreasing the suffering from chronic pain; and f) controlling seizures. ... [It] seems to work differently than many conventional medications for the above problems, making it a possible option for persons resistant to the conventional medications.”

— American Public Health Association, concluding that “greater harm is caused by the legal consequences of [medical marijuana's] prohibition than possible risks of medicinal use”

MEDICAL MARIJUANA: THE NEED FOR SAFE AND LEGAL ACCESS

“Medical marijuana helped me when the strongest prescription painkillers failed — or left me in such a stupor I couldn't function. Patients struggling for their lives and dignity against illnesses like MS, cancer, or AIDS should not be treated as criminals.”

— Talk show host and multiple sclerosis patient Montel Williams

WHAT IS MEDICAL MARIJUANA?

Many patients suffering with HIV/AIDS, glaucoma, cancer and chemotherapy, multiple sclerosis, epilepsy, and other debilitating illnesses find that marijuana provides relief from their symptoms. Marijuana's medical applications include:

- Relief from nausea and appetite loss;
- Reduction of intraocular (within the eye) pressure;
- Reduction of muscle spasms; and
- Relief from chronic pain.

Physicians often find that marijuana is able to provide relief for symptoms and illnesses when prescription medicines fail to do so. Yet, other than for five people with special permission from the federal government¹, medical marijuana remains illegal under federal law.

WHAT OPTIONS ARE AVAILABLE TO PATIENTS WHO FIND MEDICAL MARIJUANA HELPFUL?

Patients for whom other treatments have proven unsafe or ineffective have three options:

- Continue to suffer without effective treatment;
- Illegally obtain marijuana — and risk suffering consequences related to its illegality, such as impure, contaminated, or chemically adulterated marijuana, and/or arrests, jail, fines, court costs, property forfeiture, probation, and criminal records; or
- Become a resident of one of the 12 states that protect medical marijuana patients from arrest and jail.

1. These five patients were accepted into an experimental federal program that was closed to new applicants in 1992 after a surge of applications. Despite having created the program to gather scientific data on the medical effects of marijuana, no government agency has published a single study of the information collected.

Twelve states have enacted laws protecting medical marijuana patients ...

Alaska, California, Colorado, Hawaii, Maine, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Washington have all enacted laws allowing seriously ill patients to use marijuana with a doctor's recommendation. Patients in these states are protected from state-level arrest and prosecution.

... and the majority of Americans support making marijuana available to seriously ill patients.

A national Gallup poll released in November 2005 found that 78% of Americans support "making marijuana legally available for doctors to prescribe in order to reduce pain and suffering."

WHERE DO DOCTORS STAND ON MEDICAL MARIJUANA?

- After analyzing all existing data on marijuana's therapeutic uses, the National Academy of Sciences' Institute of Medicine concluded in a 1999 report funded by the White House drug policy office that "there are some limited circumstances in which we recommend smoking marijuana for medical uses."
- A 1990 scientific survey of cancer specialists found that 54% of those with an opinion favored the controlled medical availability of marijuana, and 44% had already suggested at least once that a patient obtain marijuana illegally.²
- The American Public Health Association, American Nurses Association, American Academy of HIV Medicine, Lymphoma Foundation of America, Leukemia & Lymphoma Society, and many other medical institutions support safe and legal access to medical marijuana for patients whose doctors recommend it.

2. R. Doblin & M. Kleiman, "Marijuana as Antiemetic Medicine," Journal of Clinical Oncology 9 (1991): 1314-1319.

- I want to support MPP Foundation financially. Please accept my enclosed generous tax-deductible donation of:

___ $1,000 ___ $250 ___ $100

___ $50 ___ $25 ___ other

Visit www.mpp.org/donate to donate by credit card.

- I want to receive e-mail news updates and opportunities to use MPP's online action system to contact my elected officials. Sign me up for MPP's free e-mail alerts at:

_____@_____._____

- I want to receive more information about MPP by U.S. mail. (Please provide name and address below.)

Name

Street Address

City, State, Zip

Telephone

Marijuana Policy Project Foundation
P.O. Box 77492
Capitol Hill
Washington, D.C. 20013
www.mpp.org