Connecticut Voters Support Legalizing Recreational Marijuana

Survey Findings

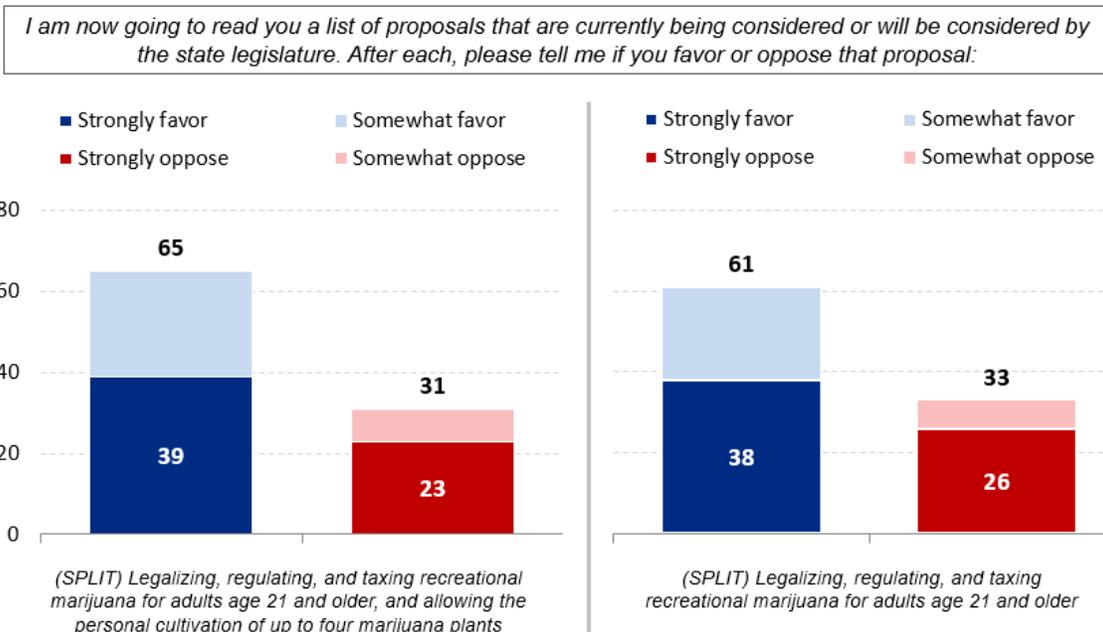

To: Interested Parties

From: GQR

Voters in Connecticut are ready to legalize recreational marijuana. A recent survey shows a solid majority of voters in the state favor legalizing, regulating, and taxing marijuana for adults age 21 and older, as well as allowing adults to cultivate up four marijuana plants themselves.¹

No less than 61 percent of voters favor legalizing marijuana in Connecticut. That number grows to 65 percent when including an allowance for personal cultivation. Just one-third of voters oppose legalization. Majorities of Democrats and independent voters favor both versions of the proposal, while Republicans are divided. Support for both proposals is also strong across the state’s congressional districts and net positive across gender and age lines.
