Talking Points:

We’ve provided some talking points below. However, it is advisable to avoid too much repetition. (Briefly making a few key points that other witnesses have made can be worthwhile, though.) If you know individuals whose lives were negatively impacted by cannabis prohibition, sharing those stories can also be quite powerful.

- Marijuana prohibition has failed New Jersey. New Jersey wastes more than $143 million per year to enforce marijuana possession laws. Throughout the past decade, New Jersey has spent more than $1 billion to enforce these laws. These are resources that could be invested in treatment, education, prevention, or other community needs.

- Police make a marijuana possession arrest in New Jersey on average every 22 minutes. According to a 2017 ACLU study based on data from the FBI Uniform Crime Reporting Program, New Jersey is making more arrests for marijuana possession than ever, in a manner that is more racially disparate than ever.

- A recent Monmouth University poll revealed that 61% of respondents would vote in favor of legalizing and taxing marijuana in New Jersey.

- Decriminalizing marijuana in the interim is essential to ensuring that thousands are New Jerseyans are not subjected to humiliating, life-altering arrests while waiting for the opportunity to legalize marijuana at the ballot box, and for that law to be implemented legislatively.

- Assembly Bill1897 should be strengthened and advanced. The amount of cannabis covered — a mere 10 grams — is less than most other decriminalization and legalization states, and the fines are beyond the reach of many, especially due to the devastating financial effects of COVID-19. Virginia recently passed a far more reasonable law, decriminalizing up to an ounce and imposing a $25 fine.
